READ IT TO THEM STRAIT:

You are listening to a pirate broadcast when you catch a job offer from a fixer that is known in the shadows in the Seattle Metroplex. Digital Doom has a reputation of being honest, for a fixer, and always fulfills his jobs.

<Excerpt from Broadcast>

Digital Doom: So you have a job offer?

Willow: I do. I am willing to pay any Shadowrunner team 100,000 Y for the return of my family and the release of any pixies found in the Aztechnology lab they have to be kept in. I don't know the location of the lab, or the whereabouts of the pixies, but for the money, any runner team should be able to track this down.

Digital Doom: Do you have a packet? I can put out the job to listeners and other runners I know. We won't be doing wetwork for the Redwings, but tracking down and freeing pixies is something I can get behind.

Willow: Here is a chip with all the info that I have.

Digital Doom: thank you. I will put it on Shadowrun Survival Guide and get a team to run it.

If the team decides to take the job, their normal fixer can hook them up with contact info for a representative of Digital Doom, (They will not talk with DD himself, they will get one of his deckers, either Yacco or DC (Digital Cowboy)).

Yacco:

Yacco will only meet the runners in a matrix club. His Icon is a black and white build copying an old 1990's cartoon from Warner Brothers. Yacco's Icon was a black and white, except the red nose of Yakko from the old cartoon.

Yacco is a prime runner who has been running the matrix before the crash 2.0. He is difficult to negotiate with, and if runners try, he may steal a program off of their deck/comlink/or other electronic source that will affect the runners, who will not know it was done until they need the software.

If they don't dig too far into Yacco, then he will not take the program. He will be honest with the runners and will be a little too generous with them, offering a bonus of 5K each if they record proof of releasing pixies and finding the news of what happened to Willow's kin.

Digital Cowboy

DC is another one of DD's deckers. He uses an old 8 bit icon that stands out in the high definition of the Matrix. His jerky pixelated image is only for aesthetics, his icon and programs are all top notch and he will gladly tear through any decker trying to find their way onto his system.

DC is not going to offer a bonus for any aspect of the run. The only negotiation that he will do is, he will give 2K each for an advanced payment. This can be used to hire him for part of the run, or anything else they may decide they needed.

His best ability is a quick shoot attack and moving through the shadows in the Matrix. This makes fighting him difficult.

During the meet, if everything goes well, the team will receive a data packet with everything they have on the job.

<Data Packet 3.45MP>

Targets to be freed:

Pixy F 20 Ivy

Pixy M 12 BrownLeaf

Pixy F 16 Daisy

Vehicle seen fleeing the scene was registered to Aztechnology. Plate number 8983iukeud8 registered to motorpool at Everette location. GPS for that night was deleted, but re-constructed by Digital Doom and his team of deckers. Location shows the Aztechs moving to the waterfront before returning to the garage.

It is suspected that Aztechnology has a submersible laboratory, but not confirmed.

GM NOTES

Any other data that the GM sees fit to let slip for the runners to find the lab. Lab location is up to the GM, whether in Aztlan, Seattle, or the Pacific Ocean depends on the runners experience and GM's choice.

As this is a Mega Corp, even a successful run can be traced back to the underprepared runners. GM's be sure and keep track of the runners plans for this run. AZ uses magical tracking, electronic tracking/tagging, and will cast through blood or other body parts to hit runners.

If you run this run, let me know how the team did. Email digitaldoom@shadowrunsurvivalguide.com
