<I was doing a job in Magadan, Russia when I ran into one of these creatures. It was a large humanoid creature, similar to a sasquatch or yeti, but had a hunger like a windigo.> Dizzy Devil

Description

The Mirygydy is a large humanoid that is about 7 feet(3.3M) tall with a small head and no visible neck. It has a strong upper body with wide shoulders and robust arms. It has a flat face like that of a human being, and that it often walked on two legs, that its body was covered with a thick black fur, and its feet armed with enormous claws; that its strength is terrible and has hunters afraid to go out alone in this territory.

<Sounds like a sasquatch. If that is all it is it shouldn't be posted here.> Doubtful Thomas

The creature has been known to scavenge game killed by hunters. It will use its hands to tear off and eat raw meat. It is thought that it eats seals, bears, and other creatures in the summer time while hibernating through the winter months. <So if found, it won't be during the winter months? Sounds safer.> Nine Lives

History

In Mongolian folklore, an Almas, Alma, Mirygydy or Almasty, among other variants (Mongolian: Алмас, Chechen: Алмазы, Turkish: Albıs/Albız or Albastı), is a creature or deity said to inhabit the Caucasus and Pamir Mountains of Central Asia, the Altai Mountains of western Mongolia, and the eastern mountains in Russia.

During the most notable sighting in August 1970, Victor Chebotarev and two other hunters saw a large, hairy, humanlike creature near the Anguema River in the Chukotskiy Region. The pair were out hunting when they got a deer. A large humanoid creature moved to the downed animal, picked it up and tossed it over its shoulder and faded into the snow. The men were so afraid of the creature that they didn't even think about shooting it. <Was it the fear power or where these men just to scared to shoot an unknown creature?> Chrome

<From my run in I think it was the fear power. I was scared dreckless, and I don't balk at anything.> Dizzy Devil

In 1992, a group of scientists went on an expedition to search for the almas in the Caucasus Mountains. The group, funded by the University of Moscow, found traces of the creature, tracks, fur, and bones from feedings, but did not get any actual sightings of the creature.

A 2010 study, before magic returned, concluded that hair samples found in the 1992 expedition that were attributed to the Mirygydy were in fact from other species including Ursus arctos, Equus caballus, and Bos taurus. <In layman's terms for our publicly educated runners: Bear, Horse, and Cow.> Homework Dictator

Post Awakening (2011)

In 2045, a study on the hair was conducted by MIT&M in the UCAS.

Through a magical process it was proved that the 2010 study was not only wrong, but they failed to prove that they had in fact had hair from a not yet known sapient and magical creature. They were also able to prove that these creatures have, use, and are closely associated with magic. This should be a warning for any hunters out there looking for these beings. <I would have thought that the hair samples would have deteriorated with all that time.> Inquisitive Cub

<They were stored properly.> Inspector G. Adget

These creatures eat flesh, carrion, and any other meat they can find. Their hunger rivals that of the wendigo, without having the side effect of the Human MetaHuman Vampiric Virus. If you see them, it is suggested that you run.

Current Territory

The Mirygdys have been spotted across Russia and down into Mongolia through the years. It is believed that they have caves and villages hidden throughout the region. <If you find a cave complex, DO NOT GO IN THERE! Their numbers are unknown. You might find yourself the main course in the next meal> Dizzy Devil

Why the interest?

With the creature having similar feeding habits as a wendigo without the introduction of the HMHV, corporations are hoping to learn more about creature powers, critters using magic, and the deep hunger of the creatures without the threat of infection. They are also hoping to find a new creature that they can use for experimentation. <Of course the corps want to find a new way to run experiments that would be considered inhumane if the creature is sapient. Those Dreckheads!> SCMHR Member

<I so agree.> Yacco

Possible similar species

These creatures have a resemblance to both sasquatch and wendigo, and they seem to be a mix of the two. It is unknown if they are sapient like the sasquatch or just a mindless creature like the wendigo. Whatever they are, they are different from all other similar creatures.

Gamemasters Note:

The Mirygy are an offshoot of the Sasquatch that live in the Arctic regions in Russia, mountains in Asia at higher elevations, and other high glacier mountain peaks around the world. These creatures are sapient, but do not want anything to do with society as it is today.

These beings live in villages, usually underground under a glacier, where they hibernate through the winter. In the spring-fall they hunt for food to prepare the village for the next winter. They will take any kind of meat that they can find, including metahumans.

All of the hunters are magically inclined. Usually shamans, but some may be adepts as well. They do have a language that they speak, but no one has ever heard it before. The few that have been seen never made any sound.

Only the male creatures have the Fear power, making them the perfect hunters for the village. The females stay in the village and protect the young. They might not be as physically strong as the male counterparts, but the females of the species have a better willpower +1 and intel +1.

As these are extremely rare creatures, the villages will be small. Made up of only a few family groups. The total numbers for these creatures worldwide is less than 2000.

These creatures can learn other languages, and will, but they have to be exposed to it for a time to begin understanding it. Once understood, their mimicry and performance will improve to be better than the sasquatch.
